Tech-Fast.Com looks to the East:

The business strategy has been known & set for some period of time. Principally this was to have at least three global locations servicing the local customer base.

The most logical first step was to establish the Asia-Pacific location, which would be central to the future growth of the business, providing the low cost manufacturing base needed to compete in some product marketplaces.

Ideally the facility would give us many immediate benefits & in the medium to long term would build a very sound foundation for growth in the area. The driving factor is to follow the very many western companies who have re-located their manufacturing operations there & provide the same products & services that we do here in Europe.

Additional to this was the need to identify people who could manage the business locally in the same way as we would like, but also bring local contacts to our attention which could assist in every area of the businesses activity.
